JULIA CARTER

juliacarterartist.com

JULIA CARTER, of Queensland, Australia, has donated a large painting to Wesley Hospital in Brisbane along with other works that now hang in a hospice in England. She donates her time and talent to many organizations, including Ronald McDonald House, Beyond Blue for Depression and a foundation for child-safety awareness. She also supports Médecins Sans Frontières (Doctors Without Borders) with monthly monetary donations.

“I prefer to donate my paintings where they give the greatest benefit,” she says. “I am constantly mindful of wanting to help others, and I keep an open mind and look for the next opportunity. I would love to continue donating and make bigger contributions all around the world.”

Her inspiration for charity comes from her gratefulness at overcoming serious injuries she incurred more than 10 years ago in a workplace accident. “Painting was an important part of my recovery and took me on a wonderful path,” she says.

Her large-scale, vibrant nature scenes reflect her positive attitude. “Artwork lifts up the spirit and can take others into another world, where they can be free from pain and suffering,” she says. “I think artists are in tune with their souls and have an innate desire to help others.”
